Forbidden Fortune Telling: Is Predictive Tarot Reading Still Taboo?

The first book that I ever read about Tarot was “Mastering the Tarot: Basic Lessons in an Ancient, Mystic Art” by Eden Gray. I immediately fell in love with the idea that I could have foreknowledge of the events that may unfold in my life so that I would be prepared. I am a control freak. I hate secrets, I hate surprises, the more I know about what is happening or what to expect, the more confident and safe I feel.

Fraud has always been rampant in the psychic industry, whether they use tarot cards, palm readings, clairvoyance or any other method of fortune telling, scam artists have tainted the industry in such a way that many tarot readers are afraid of providing predictive readings out of fear of being accused of being a fraud or fear of being wrong.

Through the 26-plus years of my tarot journey so far I have seen the tarot go from being predictive focused to introspective and self-development focused.

Here’s where my controversial point of view pisses people off: It’s safe to provide readings that have no need or ability of validation or verification such as Akashic Record Readings or Past Life Readings - I have been given several Past Life Readings that have all been very different and which may or may not be true - How can I verify those readings?

With predictive readings it becomes clear whether or not the reading was accurate in time.

The problem that I see with Readers providing readings that focus solely on Introspection, Shadow Work, or Inner Child Trauma for other people is that not every reader providing those types of readings have any proper training and can actually do irreparable damage to their clients.

I highly encourage doing Introspection, Shadow Work, or Inner Child Trauma work for yourself through Tarot Cards because it can be life changing, but only properly trained, through accredited educational institutions, should be providing those services for others.

I would rather be wrong about a potential future event than cause additional, unnecessary, irreparable trauma to my clients.

Feel free to agree or disagree with me just remember that you have to live with the choices that you make and the consequences of them.

Now let's talk about predictive Tarot Card Meanings and do some PREDICTIVE readings for each other.

The following Tarot Card meanings are a very small sample of some of the predictive card meanings that I have developed over the past 26 years of experience, practice, and learning.

They are a combination of various tarot card, playing card, and intuitively-inspired meanings that I have learned, combined and used with great accuracy over the years. Try them out for yourself and see if they are accurate for you.

Trial and error by actual practice works better than any class, workshop, or book read.

Cross off what doesn't work for you and add your own meanings as you develop them.

Physical descriptions will change with the deck that you are using and how they are represented.
